Blaine is having a jolly time. The muggings are still in progress. They worry about next year.

Mrs. Blaine received the announcement of being invited to the garden party in London. This is a severe blow to the muggings.

It is stated in Grand Army circles at St. Paul that President Cleveland has decided to postpone his visit to St. Paul to some time after the completion of the Grand Army encampment. It is a plan to display rebel flags.

The new constitution of the Knights of Labor forbids the use of intoxicating liquors at any meeting, ball or picnic. If the Knights would not use it at all, and teach other labor organizations to follow the example, there would be fewer strikes and more money in the pockets of the workmen.

Peter Finerty, who died last week, at Waukegan, left $500,000 to his heirs. Fourteen years ago he was working a poor farm in Iowa, and afterwards became a deck-hand on a boat running between Keokuk and St. Louis. Finally he went west, became a miner, discovered the "Little Chief" mine at Leadville, Colo., and by shrewd management made a large fortune. He could neither read nor write. His wife ran away from him in the days of poverty. Finerty was a very generous man, and his simplicity of character was not spoiled by success.

It is a pleasure to call the attention of the readers of the Gazette to the address of Capt. George R. Peck, which will be found on the last page of this issue. The fact that Mr. Peck returns to his Alma Mater after an absence of nearly a score of years, and speaks to the friends and neighbors of his early years, is in itself a matter of rare moment; and when to this is added the further fact that his address was thoughtful, scholarly and eloquent, and worthy of the occasion and the author, its publication will be welcomed by the people of Rock county, the majority of whom have enjoyed a personal acquaintance with Capt. Peck. The address itself is practical, without being commonplace; philosophical without being metaphysical, and its personal will be found profitable and entertaining. It is an occasion for rejoicing that Capt. Peck was able to leave his post at the head of the legal department of the Atchafalaya, Tuleka & Santa Fe railroad and unite with the delivery of this address a season of visiting which has been a delight to his old friends.

It is said by one who has sharply criticized "Bob" Ingersoll's tribute to Henry Ward Beecher, that the birth of that great man under the conditions named by the original, is not one of the blackest pictures of life ever made. Mr. Beecher's birthplace, according to the Colonel, was "a Puritan pontifical, of which his father was one of the wardens—a prison with very narrow and closely grated windows. Under its walls were the rayless, hopeless, and measureless dungeons of the damned; and on its roof fell the shadow of God's eternal frown." His home was simply an acquisition in which babies were tutored for the good of their souls, in which "their wills were broken or subdued, their natures deformed and dwarfed, their destinies defeated or perverted. Life was robbed of its spring, its summer, and autumn. * * * No laughter, no sunshine, no joyous, free, unburdened days." The orthodox Congregationalism of that day, too, was "a heartless and inhuman" as the religion of cannibals. "It despised every natural joy, hated pictures, abhorred statues, no law and lustful things, overcast music, regarded nature as fallacious and corrupt, man as totally depraved, and woman as somewhat worse."

One would suppose that young men and young women growing up under such dark and gloomy influences as those named by Ingersoll, would have shown it in their life. But what are the facts? In the home that Ingersoll describes as a penitentiary—an acquisition—where the children's natures were deformed and dwarfed and their destinies defeated and where were the measureless dungeons of the damned, was reared to manhood and womanhood, one of the most remarkable families ever produced on American soil. In all the history of this country there cannot be found a family having such a splendid history as the Beecher family. Did the superstition of that time, did its rayless hope, did its darkness, spirits that came from that home to vex the world? or were it the purity of that home, the father's love and the mother's tender care and ceaseless sacrifice, that gave the world "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and the wondrous oratory that made Plymouth point famous in its lands. Henry Ward Beecher very often thanked God for the home in which he was reared because it made him strong and better fitted for the great life he lived. These are some facts. With Colonel Ingersoll should have added before he blasphemed all that the was sacred in a Christian home.

In an interview, General Neal Dow is charged with saying that he is weary of prohibition work in Maine. Well he may be. With him it has been a struggle for thirty-three years, and yet in Maine prohibition does not prohibit. Why? Because those charged with the administration of the law are either moral cowards or fail to do their duty through necessary motives. How things are changing in Maine, as regards the prohibition law may be learned from the following: "The Voice, the New York prohibition organ, recently addressed inquiries touching the enforcement of the Maine prohibitory law to eighteen representatives of Maine—most clergymen, physicians, and lawyers—and although the replies are not at all to the liking of the Voice it has the honor to print them in full. Without exception the correspondents state that the prohibitory law is not enforced in Bangor, but various reasons are assigned for the lapse of the statute into 'innocuous desuetude,' as many of them seem to consider its present condition. To the question whether a majority of the community would sustain the strict enforcement of the law, the Rev. Joseph Smith says he can only return 'a qualified answer,' but he thinks if the women could vote it might be different. Dr. J. A. Closs says: 'I do not believe in the enforcement of the law.' J. D. Warren, lawyer, says: 'I do not believe in the enforcement of the law.' Peregrine White, lawyer, says that 'the law has never been fairly lived up to, and to all human probability never will be.' Perhaps the most favorable opinion expressed is that of H. O. Goodnow, who thinks that possibly public sentiment might be educated up to the point of sustaining the law, although he makes no estimate of the time necessary to produce such a change. As the Maine liquor law was enacted over thirty-three years—a third of a century ago, has been strengthened at nearly every session of the Legislature by every device of human invention, and now remains a dead letter in all the larger cities and populous places and is enforced only in the rural districts, where almost every body is a voluntary teetotaler, the process of educating the people of the cities up to its requirements seems to be very slow.

A CHAT WITH POWDERLY.

WHY HE IS OPPOSED TO CHILD LABOR.

His Views on Foreign Immigration—Glass Works Shut Down—Other Labor Matters.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 1.—General Master Workmen Powderly yesterday detailed facts concerning child labor gleaned from his long residence in the coal regions. He showed how the children whose education was neglected, as they grew into manhood, would naturally gravitate into the Kingdom of Ignorance, illiterate, ignorant, and devoid of intelligence.

"These are the men," continued Mr. Powderly, "that the Knights of Labor have to deal with, and if possible mold into something better. Men who can not read and write, who could not make a candle to be led by, and who for any one who may be an enemy of the officials, simply because they can not add up a column of figures. The ignorance of many of the Knights is what causes much of the trouble in the coal regions. It makes the men the tool of the unscrupulous demagogue and places them under influences that bring about a state of affairs worse than anarchy."

Mr. Powderly's face brightened with hope, but it darkened again as he said: "But there is one question that the American people must take up that locally concerns the workmen. It is or will become the burning question of the day—an issue which will excite all others in importance—and that question is the problem of allowing these nationalities to enter here and become a burden on our country and a menace to the American home. As a ruling to decide who should be excluded I would make it an almost insurmountable rule that a man or woman who could not sustain himself or herself and their respective families for one year should not be allowed to land."

FIELD ENTITIES.

Noter that Jay Gould has secured the "L" stock.

New York, July 1.—The World this morning says: "Cyrus W. Field turned over the remainder of his elevated railway stock to Jay Gould yesterday. The amount was 20,000 shares, which with the 30,000 shares previously disposed of by Mr. Field, places in the hands of the former the total holding to have been 50,000 shares. The value of Mr. Field's big block of stock at $10 a share, which was the market price before the downward movement began, was $500,000. He now has no interest in Manhattan and will retire from the board of directors. Mr. Gould will keep the first lot of 30,000 shares to add to his own holding, making his total interest in the stock of the company about $1,000,000. The second lot of 20,000 shares he will split up. This stock was subscribed for yesterday. 'The World' has the whole story of Mr. Field's retirement from a good authority. It was enforced. He was carrying his money and on margins. He had borrowed money from nearly every trust company in the street on the stock as fast as he required it in order to buy more. He finally cornered the stock and ran the price up to $10. The fall of his corner, however, the fate of nearly all corners. Disaster overtook it. 'Hussell Sage' was asked last night if the statement of Mr. Field's complete retirement from the elevated railway was correct, and he replied that it was. Mr. Field had disposed of all his stock, as stated, to Mr. Gould."

JAPANESE ENTERPRISE.

How the Natives Took Up an American Monopoly.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—An illustration of the cleverness and initiative powers of the Japanese, which might also serve to point an argument in the discussion of the international-copyright question, is afforded by certain Japanese publications which have been exhibited to prominent officers of the State department. It appears that when the study of English was made compulsory in Japan a number of American school books were imported, and by formal order, made the text book of the native schools. American book-makers had quite a lucrative trade for a time. But the Japanese soon turned their attention to the subject, and after a few experiments began turning out clever reproductions of the American publications of such excellence and in such quantities that the demand for the American product has now practically ceased. The only infirmity of the Japanese books noticeable at a casual examination is in the illustrations, and this is accounted for by the fact that the native engravers have not yet discovered the art of cutting the pictures on the grain and of the block, but uniformly engrave on the side, which results in a slightly blurred picture.

1997, 1998). A few other studies have shown that the use of a single word to describe a concept can lead to different interpretations of the concept (e.g., Wright et al. 1997). For example, the word "change" can be interpreted as a change in the amount of a substance, or a change in the type of substance. In this study, the word "change" was used to describe a change in the amount of a substance, and the word "change" was used to describe a change in the type of substance. The results of this study suggest that the use of a single word to describe a concept can lead to different interpretations of the concept, and that the use of a single word to describe a concept can lead to different interpretations of the concept.
